Medicare Part D Ensures Access to the Medicines You Need.

Congresswoman Martha McSally is Fighting to Keep it That Way.

Liberal politicians are proposing changes to Medicare Part D that would give government bureaucrats more control over seniors' prescription drug coverage. If the government "negotiates" drug prices, seniors will have less access to the medicines they need.

The truth is that there is already negotiation happening in the competitive Medicare Part D marketplace, which results in lower costs for America's seniors and taxpayers. That's why premiums remain affordable and beneficiaries continue to have access to a range of plan options that best meet their health care needs.

More government bureaucracy will not lower costs for seniors. Instead, it will mean fewer choices and less access to the medicines on which America's seniors rely.

"The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office has consistently stated that government 'negotiations' with drug companies will significantly restrict seniors' access to medicine."

*– Douglas Holtz-Eakin
Former Director, Congressional Budget Office*

Medicare Part D Works Helping America's Seniors

- Overall Part D spending is nearly 50% lower than original projections (2004-2013)
- More than 90% of seniors are satisfied with their coverage
- Average premiums paid by seniors are half of the original estimates, in part because the current competitive marketplace is holding down costs
- Beneficiaries get a wide choice of plan options
